5 THINGS TO KNOW

WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

MATT JUUL, BOSTON FEATURES EDITOR

Now that recreational marijuana is legal in Massachusetts and several other states, it's no surprise that cannabis entrepreneurs are exploring new ways for weed lovers to indulge. Move aside, edibles, because a wave of marijuana-infused beverages is planning on taking over the industry, and a number of big-name brands are backing it. If you're curious about drinking marijuana, flip ahead to find out what's going on behind the push to make cannabis beverages mainstream.

1 Presidents' Day protests decry emergency declaration

Activists in Washington, Chicago and dozens of other U.S. cities protested on Monday's Presidents' Day holiday against President Donald Trump's declaration of a national emergency to secure funding for a U.S.-Mexico border wall. Calling Trump's declaration an abuse of power and usurpation of Congress, organizers with the nonprofit advocacy group MoveOn.org and other participants said it was important to let the outrage over the move be heard. "We disagree with the state of emergency declared by the president and stand with our immigrant colleagues and friends," said Darcy Regan, executive director of Indivisible Chicago, which co-hosted the protest there. Trump invoked the emergency powers on Friday after Congress declined to fulfill his request for $5.7 billion to help build the wall that was his signature 2016 campaign promise.

2 Weinstein sex assault trial pushed back to June 3

Harvey Weinstein's trial on criminal sexual assault charges has been pushed back a month and is now slated to begin June 3, according to the New York Post. Prosecutors accuse Weinstein, 66, of forcibly performing oral sex on a woman in 2006 and raping another woman in 2013. Judge James Burke and prosecutors agreed to a new trial date in Manhattan Supreme Court after attorneys for the disgraced producer requested additional time. Weinstein was in court in January with his new legal team, Jose Baez, Ronald Sullivan and Duncan Levin, though two of his new lawyers represented one of the disgraced Hollywood mogul's most vocal accusers, actress Rose McGowan. They replaced Ben Brafman, a criminal defense lawyer with clients including Michael Jackson, rapper Sean "Diddy" Combs and "pharma bro" Martin Shkreli, who withdrew from the case. TERRY MOSELEY

4 Queen to rock Oscars with live performance

British rock band Queen will perform live at Sunday's Oscars ceremony, organizers said on Monday, following the blockbuster success of Best Picture nominee "Bohemian Rhapsody." "Is this the real life? Is this just fantasy? We welcome @QueenWillRock and @adamlambert to this year's Oscars!" the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences announced on its official Twitter feed. The band, whose late frontman Freddie Mercury is the subject of "Bohemian Rhapsody," is now made up of original members Brian May and Roger Taylor with former "American Idol" star Adam Lambert taking on vocals. "Bohemian Rhapsody" has five Academy Award nominations, including a Best Actor nod for Rami Malek, who takes on the role of Mercury in the film. Mercury died of AIDS in London in 1991 at the age of 45.

5 Heavyweight boxer Fury signs ESPN broadcast deal

British heavyweight Tyson Fury has signed a broadcast deal under which his fights will be shown exclusively on ESPN platforms in the United States. No financial details were disclosed, but British newspaper the Daily Mail reported on Monday that the deal was worth 80 million pounds ($103 million), while the BBC reported that it covered Fury's next five fights. Fury and promoter Frank Warren signed the deal with Bob Arum's Top Rank Promotions, which has a multiyear contract with ESPN, and the agreement calls for Fury to fight a minimum of two bouts per year in the United States. British broadcaster BT Sport will continue to hold the rights for Fury's fights in the U.K. "I'm delighted," Fury said. "With ESPN and BT Sport behind me, the biggest sports platforms in the world are now linked up with the best heavyweight in the world."

Trump's biggest 2020 challenger: The East

The Land of the Liberal Elites is shaping up to be the true 2020 power player. (Just ask the Republican who wants to take Trump's job.)

letters@metro.us

Will the last East Coast politician to announce a 2020 presidential run please turn out the lights?

With former Massachusetts Gov. Bill Weld announcing on Friday that he would launch what seemed unthinkable a few months ago — a GOP primary challenge to President Trump — the nation's incubator of political power shifted to a place that seemed equally unfathomable: the Land of the East Coast Elites.

Of the nine Dems who've announced presidential runs so far, four are from the Mid-Atlantic and New England states, the highest concentration of any region: Sen. Elizabeth Warren, Sen. Cory Booker of New Jersey, Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand of New York and Rep. John Delaney of Maryland. If former Vice President Joe Biden of Delaware throws his sizable chapeau into the ring, that's Yahtzee. Or something.

And the East Coast is where all the farm-team action is, on a number of fronts: Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) is the star of the House freshman class, directing so much of the oxygen on Twitter that filmmaker Michael Moore called her the real leader of the Democratic Party. Rep. Ayanna Pressley (D-MA), who won a long-shot midterm race to become the first female African-American House member from Massachusetts, is emerging as an MVP. Rep. Seth Moulton (D-MA) may throw his hat in the ring for president. Rep. Conor Lamb (D-PA) narrowly won a special election for his solid-red seat in the spring, such a skillful centrist that his campaign was held up as a template for the Democrats' 2020 strategy; months later, he cruised to victory in a slightly redrawn district.

What happened? It was once conventional wisdom that a successful presidential campaign would have to spring from the Heartland, showing no trace of Mid-Atlantic diction. The crushing defeats of John Kerry and Michael Dukakis, iconic Mass. pols both, seemed to drive home that lesson for good.

Then Trump occurred. He upended conventional wisdom, proving, for good or for ill and seemingly against the laws of physics and logic, that a billionaire trustafarian New Yorker can become president by striking a chord with the Midwest working class.

That — and the backlash to Trump's policies, and perhaps Warren's emergence as a folk hero — liberated coastal candidates to flip his script, speaking out for the working class on progressive terms.

But the emergence of Bill Weld as an unexpected GOP challenger shows yet another unintended consequence of Trump's take-no-allies style. The president's supporters have often praised him as a "street fighter." Now, he has brought the rumble to his own turf.

"He thinks he has to humiliate whoever he's dealing with, or else he's half a man," said Weld of Trump on ABC's "This Week" Sunday. "The emergency declaration is just one example of that. Congress thought they had a deal. He says, 'Oh, you think you have a deal? I'm going to show you a deal. I'm going to show you who's boss.' It's just no way to run a railroad."

Why marijuana beverages are going mainstream

Potent edibles already make up about half of the recreational cannabis market in states like Washington and Oregon, but many investors and cannabis fans are convinced that this number will only continue to grow as a new trend takes hold: drinking your weed.

Last September, analysts at Canaccord Genuity projected the market for cannabis-infused beverages could reach as high as $600 million in the U.S. alone by 2022. Several small companies produce drinks with THC and CBD in them already, taking the form of wine, coffee, beer, vodka, seltzer, soda, chocolate milk, lemonade, apple cider and more.

Even large companies like Constellation Brands — makers of Corona beer — and Coca-Cola have reportedly indicated they're looking into producing cannabinoid-enhanced drinks for consumers.

A few reasons. It's no secret that the rapid trend toward legalization of recreational marijuana has created a massive cash cow. U.S. recreational sales in 2018 peaked at over just $10 billion in 2018, with analysts expecting that number to rise to about $16 billion this year. That means there are a lot of opportunities for large and small vendors alike to get their piece of the action.

Cannabis' newfound mainstream acceptance is also bringing into the fold folks who may have been curious about experimenting in the past, but have only come around to actually following through after its legalization. Smart vendors in the market are keen on marketing to these kinds of consumers, who often value discretion and harbor concerns about the health effects of smoking. For them, small-dosage edibles make the most sense.

How do beverages compare to edibles?
Traditional edibles can take one to two hours for a user to experience the full effects. For many drinks — especially those produced through a nano-emulsion process — users can start feeling effects as soon as 10 to 30 minutes after imbibing.

Beginners can sometimes get impatient and overindulge, which can lead to a very bad time. With lower doses and a quicker onset, the hope is that users will be able to more accurately judge their level of intoxication in real time, and ingest accordingly.

Are any businesses in Massachusetts looking into marijuana beverages?
Yes. Georgetown-based TINC is the first cannabis beverage company to announce plans to operate in Massachusetts, though they're still working with the state to become fully licensed. The headquarters will include a cannabis extraction lab and canning operation and hopes to open sometime in March or April, co-owner Eric Rogers told Boston.com.

"Given the dynamic nature of the cannabis plant, there's a lot we can do from an effects perspective," Rogers added. "So one [drink] being more uplifting, creative, energetic, whereas another might be more relaxing, social, chatty, and engaging, where another might be relaxing, anti-anxiety."

TINC's first offering will be a line of seltzer drinks with 5 milligrams of THC, though they hope to later expand to other drinks like cold-brew coffee and tea.

Build something substantial as a civil engineer

From wind technology to roads and bridges, a civil engineering degree can help you make a difference.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

When people talk about wanting to "build something" these days, it could mean a number of different things, like making a new app that revolutionizes how people waste their time online, or simply building your own personal brand through social media.

But while technology has given us new ways to find creativity in our lives, the need to maintain and advance the tangible infrastructures in our country has increased as well. In other words, what about building something "real"?

Jobs in construction and civil engineering have been projected to explode within the next decade or so to fill needs like maintaining aging structures and roads in our country, as well as bring the U.S. into the future with green and solar power. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the need for newer green power infrastructure such as wind turbine technicians and solar photovoltaic installers are both projected to increase exponentially by the year 2026. General construction jobs are also projected to see an increase by this period, with a projection of 150,400 new jobs to be added by 2026.

Many people build careers in this trade by taking on small construction jobs and working their way up the ladder to higher-paying positions. While this could take years and years to achieve through learning by experience, many schools offer civil engineering programs to give you the skills of the trade in order to get a leg up in the industry after you graduate.

Merrimack College, for example, is teaching students the skills they need in order to become well-rounded civil engineers who will be able to "plan, design and supervise construction of many essential facilities and structures such as bridges, dams, interstate highways, and buildings." Students split their time between classwork and hands-on projects that will get them ready to join the workforce directly after earning their degrees, like the 2018 Windmill Challenge, which had students create their best interpretations of windmill-powered generators to try and propel this technology into new territories.

As of now, Merrimack College is staying true to its word in helping to deliver competent civil engineers to the workforce. In 2017, 97 percent of graduates in the college's school of science and engineering had found employment in the trade within the first nine months after earning their degrees.

The Celtics will try to overturn a 5.5-game deficit in the Eastern Conference in the final stretch of the season. GETTY IMAGES

Celtics grades, post-ASG break

The C's have some work to do entering the ceremonial second half of the season.

JULIAN EDLOW
sports@metro.us

Coming out on the other side of the NBA All-Star break, the Boston Celtics sit at 37-21, good for fourth place in the Eastern Conference. The C's sit 5.5 games behind the Milwaukee Bucks in the conference and 4.5 games behind the Toronto Raptors in the division.

Their 23-8 record in the friendly confines of the TD Garden is something Celtics fans are used to, but an average 14-13 road record has hindered them this season. For comparison, the Bucks are 20-9 on the road, and the Raptors are 19-11. The Celtics haven't been the dominant force we expected them to be entering the season, but they're still a very good team.

Let's dish out some grades entering the ceremonial second half of the season, starting with the coach and general manager, and down through the top 10 rotation players.

Danny Ainge: B
The big win for Ainge was that Anthony Davis didn't move to another team at the trade deadline, leaving an opening to attempt to acquire him in July. It would've been nice to see a small move to improve (as MIL, TOR and PHI did), but the big picture is still intact.

Brad Stevens: C-
The NBA is finally getting real for Stevens. He's a fantastic coach. Maybe the best play-caller in the NBA. But when you have a team with these types of personalities, you need to learn how to be a manager, and that's new to Stevens. His job isn't in jeopardy by any means, but Stevens needs to grow as much as his young players do.

Kyrie Irving: B
On the court, he's probably been an "A-" this season. He leads the Celtics in per-game averages of points (23.6), minutes (32.5) and assists (6.9) while also holding the team's highest Player Efficiency Rating (25.30). Kyrie's talent is impossible to deny. But he's clearly caused some issues with teammates, said the wrong things to the media at times and missed 11 games due to a variety of issues.

Al Horford: B
Horford's been his typical solid self. He's missed 10 games with knee issues/rest, but when he's out there, he's helping the team win by any means. I'm grading these players against themselves and their own expectations, so this grade doesn't mean he's been equal to Kyrie. Horford leads the team with 6.8 rebounds per game and 1.4 blocks per game.

Gordon Hayward: D+
This is a really tough one because of Hayward's injury last season. We knew he'd be rusty this year, but how long would it last? Hayward's been flat-out terrible at times, disappearing on the floor for zero-point games. On the plus side, he's played in 53 games, earning 17 starts. He's worked his averages up to 11.2 points, 4.6 rebounds and 3.5 assists. He's been playing well in his last five games, so there's plenty of room for this grade to go up quickly if Hayward carries this momentum into the second half.

Jayson Tatum: B+
Tatum's taken some slack this season for not progressing as much as we expected. While he's had some growing pains, he's still a top three 21-and-under prospect in the NBA. He's second on the team in points (16.5) and rebounds (6.3), and has shown the ability to take over games at times. I haven't seen anything that would make me change my mind about Tatum evolving into a star.

Jaylen Brown: C+
Brown's growth appears to have been stunted more than Tatum's. His 12.7 points, 4.3 rebounds and 1.3 assists is solid, but even Brown views himself as a superstar in the making. On top of letting us down on the court, Brown's been the center of plenty of public controversy with his teammates, most notably Irving and Marcus Morris.

Terry Rozier: B-
Rozier has flashed the type of potential he showed last postseason in his fourth professional season. He continues to provide valuable minutes, though there has been a dip in his production as he's averaged 9.1 points, 4.2 rebounds and 3.2 assists in just over 23 minutes per night.

Marcus Smart: A-
Smart's been one of the glue pieces on the Celtics all season long. His insertion into the starting lineup was the spark that turned a cold start into a salvageable season for Boston. His energy is contagious, and we know we're always going to see it translate on defense. But the pleasant surprise has been his recent hot streak from downtown — 36 percent now on the season. Smart's ability to hit three-pointers is crucial.

Marcus Morris: A-
My only knock on Morris is that he just doesn't share the ball. That said, he's been a tremendous scoring option. Morris has been the Celtics' most consistent player this season, averaging 14.5 points and 6.1 boards in 27.7 minutes. He and Smart's toughness have been key to much of the success the starting lineup's had.

Aron Baynes: B
Baynes shares the toughness that Smart and Morris have, but multiple serious injuries this season have held him back. Baynes is averaging just 14.9 minutes over 34 games. "Incomplete" might be a more accurate grade here. Let's see how he looks when he returns from another injury.

Daniel Theis: B+
Theis has been a pleasant surprise in wake of Baynes' injuries — 6.8 points, 4.0 rebounds and 1.2 assists in 15.2 minutes. He's done an above-average job for a role player, getting minutes over a long-term project like Robert Williams.
